Is Microsoft infringing upon Xerox, Apple and Unix intellectual property?

By srlinuxx
Created 17/11/2006 - 6:21pm
Submitted by srlinuxx on Friday 17th of November 2006 06:21:04 PM Filed under Microsoft [1]

Intellectual Property is a term widely abused in the software industry by firms such as Microsoft and SCO using it to scare people into not using certain products in favor of their own. This disparaging tactic has even been given a name: Fear, Uncertainty and Doubt (FUD). It seems that anyone nowadays can make bold, unsubstantiated claims of IP infringement without actually having any proof simply to hurt another products reputation and destroy healthy competition. In this article, we will explore what intellectual property is and why every computer user should care when unreputable companies abuse legal systems in order to gain an unfair business advantage.

Full Story [2].

Source URL: http://www.tuxmachines.org/node/11115

Links: