Come and Join Tux Machines in Pleroma, Part of the Fediverse

By Roy Schestowitz

Created 10/02/2019 - 4:10am
Submitted by Roy Schestowitz on Sunday 10th of February 2019 04:10:32 AM

Filed under Site News

Summary: Tux Machines is on Pleroma.site, a lesser-known part of the Fediverse

Tux Machines has been on the Fediverse for quite some time (our Mastodon account [3]), but months ago we also joined Pleroma [2], which is an exciting new alternative written in Elixir [4].

Just a few weeks ago somebody published this "Guide for GPlus [Google Plus] refugees to choose a new social network in the Fediverse [5]" because "G+ will close on April 2nd. So to help people that haven?t decided yet where to go in the Fediverse I made some pointers. I divided this guide in a number of sections. Each section describes a certain use of social networks and which networks are most suitable for this specific use. Combine this with your preferred use of a social network and you should be able make a decision."

Pleroma too is part of the Fediverse and Pleroma.site, one large instance of Pleroma, recently completed hardware upgrades. GNU/Linux aficionados can follow us there. [2]

Site News

Source URL: http://www.tuxmachines.org/node/120505

Links:
[3] https://mastodon.technology/@tuxmachines