Hyperledger Global Forum 2020

By Rianne Schestowitz
Created 09/03/2020 - 2:39am

- Diversity and Inclusion Major Themes at Hyperledger Global Forum 2020 [3] [Ed: Accenture, the company that helps Microsoft attack GNU/Linux, pays the Linux Foundation to paint itself as exceedingly nice and tolerant]

Hyperledger Global Forum 2020 took place March 3-6 in Phoenix, Arizona, bringing together hundreds of attendees from the Hyperledger community. While enterprise blockchains, open-source projects, and other subject matters were discussed, diversity and inclusion served as the underlying theme of the conference.

- Walmart, 7 Others Join Open-Source Hyperledger Consortium [4]

Launched in 2016, Hyperledger is an open-source distributed ledger technology (DLT) consortium that aims to advance cross-industry blockchain technologies. The project is, arguably, one of the most prominent endeavors in the blockchain space that is focused on mainstream adoption of the emerging technology. Hyperledger’s members comprise of some of the most well-known technology and financial firms in the world. Now, per sources close to the matter, retail giant Walmart has joined the DLT consortium, along with seven other companies. Some of these companies include the likes of Aiou Technology, a subsidiary of DLT network IOST, Clear, a B2B smart contracts company, and Swiss DLT services firm Tangem, among others.

- Walmart joins open-source Hyperledger consortium [5]
According to a recent press release, Hyperledger has announced the addition of eight new members, including Walmart. Hyperledger is an open-source consortium that aims to advance cross-industry blockchain technologies. The other well-known firms to have joined the DLT consortium include Aiou Technology, Clear—a B2B smart contracts company and Swiss DLT services firm Tangem.

- Walmart joins open-source Hyperledger consortium [6]

- Walmart Joins Hyperledger Along With Seven Other New Members [7]

On March 3rd, Hyperledger, an open-source project created to advance blockchain technologies, announced eight new members, notably Clear, Conduent and Walmart.

- Hyperledger Announces Eight New Members, including Clear, Conduent and Walmart, at Hyperledger Global Forum 2020 [8]

Source URL: http://www.tuxmachines.org/node/134955

Links: