

Echelon Scrapped After Finding Too Many Examples Of Government Misconduct

By srlinuxx

Created 31/03/2007 - 3:28am

Submitted by srlinuxx on Saturday 31st of March 2007 03:28:52 AM Filed under Humor [1]

The idea was simple. Develop the world's largest electronic surveillance system to search for suspicious activities by criminals and terrorists. The resulting system, however, worked a little too well -- it kept finding dubious transactions that it traced back to Congress and the White House.

Now the so-called 'Echelon' system has been temporarily suspended until researchers can develop a way to ignore criminal activities committed by prominent Congressmen, while continuing to invade everybody else's privacy.

"It's a nightmare," explained an anonymous surveillance expert at the NSA (No Such Agency). "Our system kept generating these tantalizing leads -- but every time we investigated, it pointed back to a powerful Congressman that we couldn't touch. What a waste of time."

Full Story [2].

Humor

Source URL: <http://www.tuxmachines.org/node/14855>

Links:

[1] <http://www.tuxmachines.org/taxonomy/term/104>

[2] <http://humorix.org/articles/2007/03/echelon/>