Tux Machines is now self-hosting IRC

Tux Machines is probably one of the largest (in terms of # of pages) GNU/Linux sites out there. But the IRC channel is

The IRC channel is #tuxmachines at irc.techrights.org. To use your own IRC client, refer to techrights.org.

Another option (if the above does not work) is Mibbit, but there may be privacy risks.
The 'IRC wars' of May (and to some degree June as well) left us in a precarious situation and over at Techrights we have set up our own IRC network. In June we set up a #tuxmachines channel in this new network. It has a two-way bridge set up with Freenode, so either network would be valid for following our updates.

We've accordingly updated the IRC page [2] and the corresponding archives [3]. We welcome people to join us in IRC. It's a substitute to RSS feeds or social (control) media. It's now hosted by us, so from a privacy perspective the readers are far better off. It's definitely an upgrade, a well overdue one. ?
