

New Features in OpenOffice.org 3.1, an Early Look

By srlinuxx

Created 20/01/2009 - 6:05pm

Submitted by srlinuxx on Tuesday 20th of January 2009 06:05:39 PM Filed under OOo [1]

OpenOffice.org 3.1 is 65 days away, and developers are finishing up more than 1000 issues targeted for this Microsoft-Office-killer packing an army of new features, enhancements, and bug fixes.

Antialiased drawings

By far, the most requested feature in this release is anti-aliasing, which smooths edges of diagonal lines. On the left is OpenOffice.org 3.0, and the right is OpenOffice.org 3.1. Both images are enlarged to show detail.

Drawing primitives (including lines, circles, and charts) are antialiased in Calc, Draw, Impress, and Writer. Antialiasing is supported in editing and export modes, but not yet in full-screen mode.

Solid dragging

Drawing objects are further improved through the new solid dragging feature. Before only a wireframe was shown; now a 50% transparent copy is painted.

more here [2]

Source URL: <http://www.tuxmachines.org/node/33838>

Links:

[1] <http://www.tuxmachines.org/taxonomy/term/127>

[2] <http://www.ooninja.com/2009/01/openofficeorg-31-new-features.html>