Mark Hardardt, Novell's VP and general manager for partners and channels, has parted company with the software vendor. Hardardt's decision to leave coincides with the formal announcement of Novell's global restructuring plan, which will see the open source and identity management software vendor slash some 600 jobs.

In terms of its overall global restructuring, Novell has confirmed that it will concentrate its business on growth opportunities in the Linux, open source and identity and resource management markets.
