

Microsoft Office vs. OpenOffice

By srlinuxx

Created 30/06/2010 - 10:59pm

Submitted by srlinuxx on Wednesday 30th of June 2010 10:59:20 PM Filed under OOo [1]

Typing documents, use of spreadsheets and slideshows are essential tools in the life of almost every professional. The largest of the problems found in Microsoft Office according to the vast majority of users is its price, quite high in the opinion of many. This obligation on having to pay for an Office application suite has stimulated the development of OpenOffice, completely free and open source. Therefore, in addition to the constant improvement in its development, free version divides increasingly user's opinion about who is the best. We put these two opponents in the ring and help you choose the champion!

Meet the Fighters

In the right corner, wearing red, yellow, blue and green and bearing the title of most widely used suite of applications in the world is Microsoft Office. Coaching for over two decades in Microsoft complex and showing increasingly novelties, the package prides itself for ease of use, user friendliness, functionality and various other characteristics quite evident in the 2007 release.

On the left, only wearing black and blue, with two birds tattooed on arm is the OpenOffice. Keeps getting better with unique functions and indisputable functionality, the day of the great duel arrived!

To defend the applications we have Bill, supporter of Microsoft Office, and Franco, fanatic by possibilities present in OpenOffice.

Round 1: Price [2]

OOo

Source URL: <http://www.tuxmachines.org/node/46201>

Links:

[1] <http://www.tuxmachines.org/taxonomy/term/127>

[2] <http://www.software-latest.com/2010/06/30/microsoft-office-vs-openoffice.html>