Google's Chrome OS has been highly anticipated by people all over since its announcement. Manufacturers such as Samsung and Acer are trying their best to be the one company that gets the honor to first release a laptop or a netbook to the market that runs Chrome operating system.

Things are pretty much looking good for the two companies when out of nowhere, Kogan broke the news that they already released a laptop with Chromium OS as its operating system. Kogan is an Australian manufacturer that has been shipping the notebook in Australia and the United Kingdom since June 7 leaving Samsung and Acer to eat its dust.

What can we expect from the Agora Chromium laptop manufactured by Kogan? Will it become successful riding on the fact that it is the first? What does its spec sheet look like? Read on for the full details about the Kogan Agora Chromium laptop.
