Linux part of Blogosphere is big. There are different people, different blogs. Some of them die, like it was with K.Mandla's, some continue to grow. Today's guest in my interview room is one of the most mysterious bloggers in the Linux world. Nobody saw his face. Nobody read his replies to the comments below the articles, simply because there are no comments. But still, he owns one of the most respectable and popular resources. Let's talk with Dedoimedo about Linux, books and life in general.

DarkDuck: Hello Dedoimedo. You're one of the popular bloggers in the Linux world. How would you introduce yourself in few words?

Dedoimedo: I would say I'm a lovable misanthrope who likes to help people, go figure. It's not a paradox. I also suffer from a classic case of unwarranted self-importance.

DD: Dedoimedo is a nickname. It sounds quite unusual. What is the story behind it?
