Rumors of the impending sunset of Google TV have been around at least since September when Sony, Google's most stalwart partner for its struggling, Android-based Google TV, announced a Bravia Smart Stick media player. Sony noted "Google services" but never mentioned Google TV. The trend was confirmed by several unnamed Google TV partners in an October report by GigaOM that cited the "Android TV" name. In December, when Marvell announced an Android 4.2.2-ready, Armada 1500 Plus SoC update to the official SoC of Google TV "the Armada 1500" the Android TV term was used again.
