We've got another game to be added to the rapidly-expanding genre of animal simulator games: Catlateral Damage, which started as a game jam project and charmed its way into our hearts back at the beginning of the year with a limited demo build, has met its $40,000 Kickstarter goal. The feline festivities are anticipated to make their way to Mac, Linux, PC and Ouya in Q4 of this year.

Valve developers have released a new update for the beta Branch of the Steam client and they have implemented a number of important improvements for the In-Home Streaming feature.

In-Home Streaming is a feature that allows the Steam users to stream games from a Windows-based operating system to a Linux one, thus enabling Linux user to play games that don't have support for the open source platform.
