

Does government finally grok open source?

By Rianne Schestowitz

Created 20/08/2014 - 5:08am

Submitted by Rianne Schestowitz on Wednesday 20th of August 2014 05:08:52 AM Filed under OSS [1]

Yes, the government -- one U.S. federal government employee told me that government IT tends to be "stove-piped," with people "even working within the same building" not having much of a clue what their peers are doing, which is not exactly the open source way.

That's changing. One way to see this shift is in government policies. For the U.S. federal government, there is now a "default to open," a dramatic reversal on long-standing practices of spending heavily with a core of proprietary technology vendors.

[2]

OSS

---

Source URL: <http://www.tuxmachines.org/node/68355>

Links:

[1] <http://www.tuxmachines.org/taxonomy/term/72>

[2] <http://www.infoworld.com/t/open-source-software/does-government-finally-grok-open-source-248694>