I had to spend 9 hours in Miami, waiting for a connecting flight. 9 hours wasn't quite long enough to go out and about, but was long enough to get bored to death.

So, I decided that I would pay $7.95 for a ?day pass? for the Wifi connection. The WiFi connection at the Miami airport is managed by people who don't seem to know enough about computers to manage a home gaming LAN, let alone use Microsoft Server software for a real-life application (and, surprise surprise, nothing works).

What happened while I was trying to get my connection is simply unreal. It's a story that is just hard to believe.
