I went shopping for a laptop yesterday, with a fairly high budget and thoughts of a new MacBook, but came home with a $300 Toshiba Chromebook 2 instead. Now obviously a Chromebook gives up something to any Mac in terms of capability but my decision was possible because my laptop isn't my primary workstation. That being said the new generation of Chromebooks represent a great value and a huge leap in quality over my first-gen Acer C720. With its elegant design and amazing display (IPS up to 2400×1350) most casual observers wouldn't know that you weren't using a Mac.
